The assigned tasks were completed in their entirety within the established deadlines. However, there were unexpected situations that required greater attention and effort for its implementation, which led to certain exceptions to the original plan. Despite this, it was possible to meet all the objectives and goals in the established time.

During the application development process, new ideas and needs arose that required the implementation of additional tools and elements for the interface. These new functionalities were not initially foreseen in the scope of the project, but it was considered that their inclusion would significantly improve the user experience.

Even though these additional implementations added complexity to the project, I managed to successfully and effectively integrate them into the final product.

After some friends and family tried the app, they gave valuable feedback and said that there were still some changes to be made, one of which would be to make the app more intuitive and easy to use. I take those comments into account and work to integrate the necessary improvements in the user interface and functionality of the application. These additional changes took a bit longer, but I have finally completed everything and I believe I have achieved an application that is easier to use and more attractive to users.
